Meet Admissions Reps • Hear Inspirational Speakers

Diversely-abled students who have specific learning, developmental, and/or healthcare needs, or who carry disability labels, or who are on an IEP/ILP or 504, or who are just struggling in school, have the opportunity to speak directly with college admissions and accommodations representatives as well as collect college requirement information and other costly documents for free. College admissions representatives, program managers and private citizens, network together with students to inform and inspire students to set and reach college bound goals.

KEJI is a non-profit, charitable parent support group that provides information and social support resource services for families and caregivers of children and adults with specific needs and diverse abilities, through volunteered services of community supporters providing information and education on various health, education, employment, independent living and care giving topics.
